International Graphite seeks to expand processing facilities

International Graphite Limited (ASX: IG6) has identified significant opportunities to scale and expand its graphite processing business strategy as the Company progresses the construction of its graphite micronising processing facility in Collie, Western Australia.

The detailed design and approvals phase for the Collie Micronising Facility has commenced. At nameplate annual production capacity, the facility could generate $14.1 million in revenue with a $1.7 million expansion, doubling revenue to $28.0 million¹.

The Company is exploring opportunities to further scale, expand the Collie facilities and use its intellectual property - built through years of process flowsheet development and operating experience and customer validation of product produced at the Collie Graphite Processing and R&D Facility - to quickly establish new facilities in overseas markets, in particular Europe and the United States, leveraging additional funding opportunities that may exist in these jurisdictions.

The U.S. government recognises the strategic importance of graphite and critical minerals to the U.S. defence industrial base, and economic and national security - reflected in award consideration shown by the U.S. Department of Defense in a proposal for US$7.5 million in award funding for the Springdale 'mine to market' business plan.² Investigations assessing site locations in Savannah, Georgia to host additional downstream facilities are underway.

Sales prices for end use specifications of standard purity and high purity micronised products, as well as expandable graphite products, support the development of new processing facilities, which would further diversify and expand customer supply sources.
